Just wanted to let OCSPP's employees know about today's 3 pm Park Ranger Speaker Series program entitled "Enhancing the Presence of the Past: The National Park Service and the Recognition of African American History."

Prior to the Bicentennial of the American Revolution in 1976 there were only three National Park Service units and one National Historic Landmark that focused on African American history. Responding in part to the social unrest of the late 1960s, as well as the democratization of how Americans viewed their heritage, the National Park Service slowly began to account for the absence of African American historic properties within its recognition and documentation programs. Please join National Park Service Historian John Sprinkle as he charts the course of this awakening to a more comprehensive view of American history in the generation that came of age after Mission 66.

Registration is required, and space is limited for this Department of the Interior program. You must register by 2 pm to participate.

The registration form for the program can be found at the following link:

If you have any trouble accessing the registration form, please send an e-mail to the DOI Library at library@ios.doi.gov requesting webinar access information for today's program.
